TOMORROW I WILL TELL YOU I LOVE YOU: A SHORT STORY ON GUILT, GRIEF, AND GOD DANIEL HOVER
Changing, strangling, destroying – that is grief.
At best, we place a cork on the emotional bottle hoping it'll float away. At worst, we become the bare bones of our former selves walking a wasteland, waiting to die.
On a calm night in July, I unexpectedly lost my true love. A mental and physical rip current on my life, the devastation took me down a dark path filled with inescapable nights. I broke.
In a faithless rage, I challenged God's plan and existence.
Step into my mind and fall into my hole. See what I've seen. Feel what I feel. Understand you never want to let go even when the cost is everything. See grief from my eyes.
And know God's answer.
