A Standalone Short Story with No Cliffhanger!

Alison Morgan hasn't been home for a while. After coming out to her parents as transgender, they didn't take it too well. In an attempt to reconnect with her father, the coach of the state football team, she agrees to attend his team practices. It is there that Alison meets Trent Graham, a player she's familiar with; one of the best on the team who she connects with immediately.

Trent, however, isn't as open-minded as she'd hoped and Alison is caught between admitting her feelings for Trent and following through with them, or accepting that this might not end well and distancing herself.

With the news of a transphobic attack nearby, Alison must struggle with the fear of who she is while hoping that Trent never finds out the truth, and if he does, that maybe he'll be able to accept her despite his narrow-minded views.
