The Pursuit of Knowledge: The Many-Splendored Society: Volume 4 Hans L Zetterberg
The main division of social reality is not class, as Karl Marx thought, but societal realms. They are six in number: science, art, economy, religion, polity and morality. They are the homes of knowledge, beauty, wealth, sacredness, order, and virtue, all being cardinal values of humanity. This book deals with the community of people of knowledge and their passion for discovery. Science gives us a lesson how a societal realm is created. As a human enterprise, science emerged in collaboration and competition with religion. Two hundred years ago, the universities picked their model from the guild economy in Germany, and in time, from the market economy of the United States. Today, science is independent and global, more so than any other societal realm. The enormous success of medicine and engineering still has a big base at universities. However, their recent growth has its momentum in applications. Increasingly, current research takes place outside the universities in the context of applications. We take time to study the stream of technical innovations and find that it consists mostly of new combinations of old innovations. A full acceptance of innovations in society is found in rather short periods of history, marked by values of materialism and pragmatism.
