Twisted Views Judy Hruska
Barbara McCullough lost her only child to a drunk driver. Now 37 years later, the tragedy continues to side track the path of her and her husband’s lives. Barb's views have become twisted with pain and loathing, which allows her judgment to be clouded when she sees a boy who reminders her of her beloved Timmy. She assumes that God has sent Mason, a 16-year-old charged with a DUI, to her so that she may mend him. Instead Mason introduces Barb to his shady world and nothing is ever the same again. Barb and Bob, who have been married for more than 50 years, derive strength from each other to cope. Each has learned to take his or her turn to be the rock when the other needs stability. Barb has immersed herself in volunteer work in order to lessen her pain. But even though she keeps herself frantically busy, hatred for the man who plowed into her 16-years-old son’s car continues to gnaw at her. The McCullough’s son Timmy was killed in 1979, one year before the organization Mothers Against Drunk Driving inspired awareness and stricter laws concerning drinking and driving. Barb believes that hers and Bob’s lives were shattered, while the drunk driver got away with a fine and a scolding. Things are not always as they appear in this tear-jerking, touching and sometimes dark tale of a 74-year-old who doesn’t realize she has learned to forgive until her long-dead son is able to make it clear.
