Inspire Yourself - A Book for Teenage Girls: With 30 inspirational certificates that you create & decorate yourself Elke Porter
Please don’t be the girl who buys this book or receives it as a gift and then leaves it in their room on a shelf to collect dust. Fill in each motivational certificate after reading, reflecting and a time of thought. There is almost too much information out there that can overwhelm you, and this booklet will help filter the information you receive. After finishing this book, using quotes, poetry, sayings, home-made memes or stories, make a wall collage where your artistry and creativity can shine through. The Internet makes it easy! tranquility, even over the rushing, roaring environment that it lives in. Be like that bird. You can take a certificate and place it on a piece of coloured construction paper and post it directly on a wall in your room. Or take all of the certificates, find a giant refrigerator-sized cardboard box and use one side of it to post all 30 quotes. Use your creativity and imagination. Another idea is to post a different one on your mirror each week, so that you think about the positive reinforcement as you brush your teeth and comb your hair. If you don’t want them on your wall, you can fill them all in and then place them in a binder that you keep next to the bed. This way you can focus on a new one each night and make plans how to implement it the next day. This book was created for struggling, unhappy, angry, depressed & anxious teens. It is also for happy, silly, excited, exhuberant and joyful teens. You might experience each of these emotions throughout each day. Being a teen girl is challenging. You might simultaneously love & hate your mother for telling you what to do. You have more responsibilities at school and home. The time for self-management, self-discipline and self-evaluation has arrived. My advice is to use list-making and journal writing to keep yourself organized.
